now been fairly and fully tried before a jury of his countryween, but no verdict obtained. It was evident enough, if any reliance whatever can be placed on the story of Stevenson, that Glentworth had been guilty of rascality, but what, did not so clearly appear. In our judgement, the key to his mysterious operations in 1838—9, and to the whole business, was a scheme on his part to extort money from the Whig party to support his own career of debauchery and profliga-night, and rather a sarly one at that. Hepe he means noey. This was the motive of his self-instigated journey to thing serious by it.
